

Brief Summary

Readsript is a logical and phonetic spelling system that can be learned in a fraction of the time it takes to learn traditional spelling. If desired, it can faithfully represent the many accents and dialects of English. It is intended as a grassroots effort to solve the myriad problems of traditional spelling and its learning, while still retaining the best aspects of it. Here are the basics of how it works:

- You spell words as they are commonly pronounced.
- The letter r is, however, always spelled regardless of accent in words such as girl.
- Each letter has only one sound of English.
- The only exceptions are: x which replaces the sounds ks used in words such as extreme and ʃ which replaces the gz sounds in words such as exam.
- The letter ú is used in words such as universe and replaces the three letter word you.
- There are no capital letters needed. When names need special indication, a preceding name-dot can be used.
- There are only 26 basic letter forms to learn, but 40+ letters can be made by adding 1 or 2 dots to these.
- There are no silent letters, redundant consonants, confusing vowel patterns or archaic spellings.
